Teaching Experience

I have previously tutored and mentored students at KS3 and GCSE stages. I am well-versed in essay-based and cognitive thinking-based subjects such as Sociology, History, and English Literature. I have also advised and aided students for their University admissions and their Personal Statements.

At sixth form, I have volunteered to run sessions after-school for my A-Level Sociology peers. At Cambridge, I have also participated as Student Ambassador on open days, communicating to pupils about various issues and expanding on academic life and tips through online presentations.

Tuition Approach

I have accumulated plenty of resources and essay plans for Sociology A-Level (AQA). I can review and aid them in understanding the content. I advocate maximising their critical thinking and not drawing rigid conclusions but also alternatives, specifically with their coursework. It is most important to engage the student in discourse and adapt to their learning style, whether it be answering past paper questions or explaining challenging concepts

I will especially focus on exam specifications, various revision techniques, and expanding their essay-based critical vocabulary, which can be later utilised at university. For both subjects, I will make available practice questions, past papers, and set specific goals to target. In-depth and concise analytical skills are essential for A-Level subjects.

In Sociology, I am well-versed in exam topics such as Crime and Deviance, Beliefs in Society, Culture and Identity, and Education.

For University Admissions, it is important, specifically for essay-based courses, I encourage wide and diverse reading materials. Creativity and genuine interest are crucial for students to make an impact.
